

Performance Commentary

The stronger support for an economic recovery with continued massive monetary stimulus pushed up inflation expectations and 10-year treasury yields. These developments further underpinned the rotation into value assets. The fund delivered a strong absolute and relative return in February. Our largest position, Ivanhoe Mines, was the best contributor, as the company made significant progress in readying its Kamola-Kakula copper mine for production and copper prices strengthened further. Our undervalued US communications company Avaya delivered strong numbers as the working from home environment has boosted its revenue base and Avaya is transitioning faster than expected from on-site to the cloud. US insurance company Lincoln National benefited significantly from rising interest rates and was another strong contributor. We increased our overall exposure to the traditional banking sector, adding to Resona Holdings and NLB Group, which we think trade at a substantial discount to fair value and have tangible catalysts for rerating. We initiated a position in the Canada-based packaging material and tissue producer, Cascades. With most of its costs deriving from recycled material, we view the company as an undiscovered gem in the circular economy, trading at levels that do not accurately reflect its asset base and current earnings power, with several catalysts for rerating.
